

Grace and peace to you from our Lord God and Father!

I've finished another year of classes with the ladies. Last week, we had the Esther project where we did make-up and nails as Esther had done beauty treatments before becoming Queen. We shared with the women that they are beautiful in God's eyes and He wants them to be His princesses. I gave a manicure to a woman who enjoyed the hand massage and nail treatment and told me that she comes to class because it's one of the few places where she can find peace. We did make-up with the girls who come to English class as well and explained to them that the make-up didn't make them beautiful and that it wasn't a god, but it allowed them to feel confident about the woman that God was creating them to be. We gave each woman and girl a little bag of make-up to take home with them as a reminder of who they were.

Last week, I was blessed to have Jessica come to visit me for a week to experience my life in Paris. She helped out with the Esther Experience and came to the end-of-the-year party with me. We tried to dance like North Africans, shaking our hips and laughing. It was a real encouragement for me to be able to share my daily life with someone, including long train commutes, walks in Paris and the daily grind of cleaning the classroom and serving mint tea. She even got to experience a few aerobics classes with me as the instructor.

Many of you may be asking, "Lisa, what are you doing next year?" After much prayer and consternation, my boss and I have come to the agreement that I will remain in my current position until December or January. We do not have any new teachers coming until at least January and we'll be losing our two Germans in August. This decision has relieved a lot of stress as I needed to renew my visa to stay in the country and David and I are still trying to discern the direction our relationship and lives are taking. I would be delighted to have you continue the journey with me financially and prayerfully.

Now that classes have come to an end, I will be trying to be intentional in continuing relationships and tutoring with the ladies. I am also taking some much needed time to restore and renew my forces for the summer. In July, we will be joining forces with another organization to reach out to the people of Paris. In August, I'll be doing the youth camps in Germany and England again.

Yays!

- Make-up and parties and visits from home!
- A change of pace
- Having a plan for 6 more months

Needs:

- Discernment in knowing when to go out and when to be still and know He is God.
- Divine appointments with those who need truth and light
- For God's Word to come alive in me so I may breathe life into others.

Face to the floor,

Lisa
